With a name that suggests the eternal struggle between good and evil, it's no wonder that Wings + Horns creates pieces that straddle two conflicting styles: luxury apparel and streetwear. The brand's Calf Hair trainer, designed in Vancouver and made in Italy, features a cow-hair leather upper stitched in a subtly paneled pattern. While better-suited for pounding the pavement than the gym, the shoe's padded sock liner, six-eyelet lace-up closure, and furry texture elevate it to the realm of the divine. Since GRAY introduced Christopher Bevans, owner and creative director of clothing line DYNE, last year, he's developed a new collection for spring 2019, which tells a fresh story of technology meeting fashion. FROM LEFT: His Renzo shorts feature 3D thigh-contouring pockets, while the Schoeller woven shirt is produced at a Swiss bluesign-certified mill, where each step of the process chain complies with the five principles of sustainability. It's also embedded with a near-field communication chip that interacts with your mobile device. dyne.life »

Now more than a century old, Seattle-based activewear brand Brooks marries high design with peak performance in its spring 2019 collection. CLOCKWISE FROM LEFT: The FastForward Zip sports bra combines proprietary DriLayer fabrication with a zippered-front design that gives the breathable, sweat-wicking garment both easy wearability and a sophisticated look. The LSD (Lightweight Shelter Device) jacket offers windproof protection. The geometric pattern of the Formation crop leggings camouflages two seamless pockets along the waistband. The 45-liter Competition duffel bag from urban-athletic line RYU is formed by a polyurethane-coated canvas that makes the carryall both scuff- and water-resistant. The bag's nylon interior is treated with Polygiene technology that prevents the growth of odor-causing bacteria. To top it off, the convertible carryall is actually two bags in one: use it as either a duffel or a backpack. ryu.com ✱
